

EDITORIAL

Welcome to the first issue of Talent'News, our new employment newsletter, to be published every two months. If you are already receiving this issue, that's because we're interested in your talent!

Talent'News is a unique opportunity to get to know each other a little better. It will feature introductions to our different business sectors, the latest job openings, and tips on how to join the Safran team. And since talent attracts talent, feel free to forward Talent'News to your friends or professional acquaintances.

In closing, I would like to join everybody in the Human Resources team in wishing you every success in your career.

IS A JOB AS SUPPLIER PERFORMANCE MANAGER IN YOUR FUTURE?

credits : Safran

What exactly does a Supplier Performance Manager (SPM) do?

The SPM coordinates and guarantees the performance of our suppliers around the world. It's a key position, and critical to our supply chain.

What challenges does this position entail?

The Supplier Performance Manager reports to the purchasing department, and has a direct and very concrete impact on Safran's performance, affecting both overall revenues and quality.

What makes a job like this interesting?

First, because you'll be working in so many different areas: design, production engineering, production capacity, quality, on-time delivery and much more. It also fosters a very broad range of contacts, not only in-house, but also with our many different suppliers.
